J. W. Jennett wrote some time ago a statement to Secretary Bayard, which details a rather sensational experience, and which has come to light through the Navy Department. In his statement Jennett said that he made a contract with Samuel G. Stoan and Samuel K. Schwenk, of New York, and E. Lucien, Richie, of Philadelphia, to work, nine, and ship ymano from the Island Roncador, in the Carribsan sen, to the United States. On the 23d of May, 1884, having been filled out with three months provisions and water, twelve men and a cook salled with two vessels for the Island. The parties mentioned above were to assume all responsibility; they furnished everything. The inhorers were hired for six months from their arrival on the Island, but were to be paid in three months. On arriving at Roncador Island the men 'proceeded to got, out the guano and load the ships. They sailed away, and the men kept on with their work, expecting that the vessels would return as soon as they could go to the United States with their cargoes. Three menths passed and the vessels did not return.

The provisions were hearly exhausted, and

The provisions were nearly exhausted, and what remained were full of magnots and weavil. The men began to fish and gather a few eggs, but they suffered greatly from want of water. The island is a barren and rocky one, without water. By one means and another they managed to live for seven months, when Mr. Jennett decided to take a small yawl, the only bost they had, and sail for Aspinwall, 250 miles distant. The horrors of the trip can be imagined when it is known that they had no compass or other maritime instruments and the sail of the yawl was rotten. Two young men volunteered to accompany Jennett.

They sailed bec, 20, and Jan. 1, 1855, they arrived, almost dead, in Aspinwall. In Aspinwall Jennett chartered a vessel and took food and drink to the destinate men. He found them more dead than alive, but they were nursed and cared for and finally restored. Jennett them took out three cargoes of guano and sent them took out three cargoes of guano and sent them to wilmington, N. C. C. E. L. Ritchie & Co. here put in a claim for the eargoes. Jennett arrived in Wilmington on the 14th of March, and was immediately laid up with rheumatism for four months from the effects, as he says, of the terrible exposure in the yawl while sailing from Roncador to Aspinwall. In the report of Commodore Harmony he sub-mits estimates from the commandants of the va-rious yards for the next fiscal year aggregating $9,606,608. The estimates of the bureau itself 19.666,665. The estimates of the bureau itself aggregate only $4,884,737, which is divided as follows: For support of the bureau, $11,980; general maintenance and contingent, $340,000; support of naval asylms, $56,661; repairs and preservation, $590,000; improvements at navy yards, $5,965,357; civil establishment, $58,759. The only improvements needed at the Washington navy yard are a new wing to the machine shop to cost $50,000, and the extension of the yard wall, $21,711. The estimates of the Norfolk yard for improvements recommended amount to $1,545,116, "As this yard," writes the commodore, "is of equal importance to any on the Atlantic coast, the expenditure of a large amount for its improvement is warranted, so that it may in all respects be put in condition for carrying on all kinds of work of a first-cl-us navar establishment. Owing to its natural advantages in climate and location it is expecially recommended to the favorable consideration of Congress." The extension of the dry dock at Norfolk is especially recommended at a cost of $340,000. This is the only dry dock on the entire costs from Norfolk to the Rio Grande in which a ship of 399 feet in length can be docked, and as it is contemplated to build ships of greater length than this, a new dock of not less than 500 fe, t should also be constructed.

A Very Serious Question. [Concord Monitor.]

Several days ago the Associated Press published what purported to be an interview with President Cleveland. This interview represented the President as having decided upon such radical changes in the administration of the civil service law that its authenticity was not unpaturally uses. decided upon such radical changes in the administration of the civil service law that its authenticity was not unnaturally questioned. A denial by the Presigent has been awaited with more or less confidence. The denial has not come. On the contrary, there has been developed in the interim sufficient corroboration of the substance of the interview to make it seem probable that the President's views were correctly reported. The change alleged to be favored by the President consists in the substitution of what is known as the 'pass' examination in place of a competitive examination. That is to say, all applicants who pass at all stand upon an equal footing. The names of all who pass are sent in, and the choice may be made from the whole number. To illustrate, if the prescribed per cent is 65, and thirty applicants pass, with per centa ranging from 100 down to the minimum, the thirtieth man, who gets only 65, is equally eligible with the first on the list, who gets 100. Political or personal influence must then determine the choice.

Of course such an administration of the civil service law practically destroys it. It defeats the object of the law, and makes possible the very results against which it was especially and specifically directed. The principal object of the civil service act was the divorcement of the public service from political influence and partisan control. The securing of personal efficiency was secondary and subordinate. Not that personal efficiency is not important, and even indispensable, but the law was not needed for that purpose. The duties attaching to the offices which come under the law are not so difficult and intricate that any man of fair ability and respectable education cannot perform them. There was no considerable complaint on this score under the old law. So far as this consideration was concerned, it is not probable that new legislation would have been demanded. The chief object, as we have just stated, was to take the subordinate offices out of the hands of the rolitical propers was concerned, it is not probable that new legislation would have been demanded. The chief object, as we have just stated, was to take the subordinate offices out of the hands of the politicians. This object was, in turn, two-fold: First, to secure that permanency of tenure which is requisite to the highest success but which was found to be impossible of attainment under the old system; and, second, to prevent a cheap and unworthy class of politicians from securing, and maintaining by an unscrupulous use of the immense power of patronage, that controlling influence in practical politics to which their merits did not entitle them. The country had become weary of the rule The country had become weary of the rule of the postofile potentates and cross-roads statesmen, and to this fact, probably more than to all else, was due the passage of the cell secretaries.

than to all else, was due the passage of the civil service act.

It stands to reason that neither this nor any other purpose of the law can be subserved under the system of pass examinations. The change which the administration is said to contemplate would restore the civil service to partisan control, would be a clear evasion of the spirit of the law, and would result in its practical repeal, it is not necessary to discuss the question. There are not two sides to it, and there can be but one opinion concerning it. If There are not two sides to it, and there can be but one opinion concerning it. If President Cleyeland and his party wish to abolish the competitive principle as applied to the civil service, let them set alcut it openly, honorably, through the legitimate means of legislation. They have no right to sirangle it, no right to alsy it by indirection, and attempt to do so will meet with the swift and sweeping demundation of all honest men. From a partian point of view, Republicans may well regard it, proposed change with complacency. But it is more than a party question. It is a question of whether the country shall retregate, whether it shall go basek three years and wipe out all the progress that her been made in that time. Be on Your Guard.

Be no Your Guard.

They have no right to strangle it, no right to slay it by indirection, and attempt to do so will meet with the swift and sweeping denunciation of all honest near. From a partisan roint of view, Republicans may well regard the proposed change with complacency. Intit is more than a party question. It is a question of which the country shall retrieved, whether it shall go hack threat years and wipe out all the progress that has been able to the progress that has been able to the progress that has been made in that time.

The stock market has been extremely active to-day, and during most of the time. Beverish and irregular. The reported-sales were greater than on any preceding day this year, amounting to 787,500 shares, at herease over yesternday of 130,500 shares. The actual number of shares bought and sold were probably not very much short of 1,500,500. When the market is so extremely active it is practically impossible for the reporters to obtain a record of all the transactions. The activity continued from the opening of the beard to the close with the exception of a buil between 1 and 20 clock, which was, bowever, of short duration. An idea of the business in the forencen may be obtained from the statement that the reported sales for the first half hour were over 175,000 shares; for the first half hour were over 175,000 shares; for the first half hour were over 175,000 shares, the Erick hour, 286,000 shares. The DUFFY MALT WHEREY CONTANY—Gentlemen: About one year ago I had a patiout in the last stages of phthisis pulmonalls (consumption) who, when food or medicine was given her, would vomit it within five minutes. I had given her various remedies, including wine (champagne), whiskey, éee, but all were expelled in a few minutes, and size received nutriment only by onems and inunction of cod liver oil, which were exceedingly disagreeable to her. One day as I was making a mentals earch for some more effective remedy in this case my eve rested on a sample bottle of Duffy's Pure Mait Whiskey upon my office table. I took it with me when I visited her and administered a teaspoontial, which was not vomited. The second case was followed by a little meat juice, all of which were relained. The whiskey and meat juice were continued at short intervals, and within a week she was able to cut hearty. All this after her family had assembled to see her die.

I seldom prescribe alcoholic stimulants, but when I do I always order Pure Barley Mait Whiskey, because I am convinced that it is not only free from fuselfoil, but not in any way adulterated. Sincerely yours.

The following testimontal is from Mr. Solomon Well, a guiltenant well known in Balli-There has been a great deal of talk on the street recently about heavy purchases in London of American securities and large shipments from this city to European account. For some time past the opening prices in London were generally higher than the closing quotations of the evening before on the New York stock exchange, and this, whether from actual purchases or on account of manipulation from this side, was an important factor in lending strength to the market here. The weakness this morning was due in part to reports from London snowing that prices were heavy, and the further statements that owing to the war cloud that is beginning in Europe, and for other causes, London speculators were heavy sellers of American securities to day. The result was an excited and irregular opening, ranging between an advance of $\frac{3}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{2}$ and a decline of $\frac{3}{2}$ for the active list.

The highest prices, nowever, with few excentions, were established at some time during the forence. After midday the tendency of prices was downward, but the movement continued very irregular. There was no decided break until after 2 o'clock, when within a space of fifteen minutes nearly all the active shares desit in declined from $\frac{3}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ or the strengths, where we have seen the price of the minutes nearly all the notive shares desit in declined from $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., Eric, the grangers, and Lake Shore being the most prominent in this movement. In some cases during the final half hour most of the losses made after 2 o'clock were regained, but the movement was extremely foverfal, spasmodic, and irregular. In the final dealings some socks made sudden rallies the same time that other and more active securities were declining, and the market closed irregalar, weak, excited, and feverish, with declines ranging between fractions and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Talking in Theaters. A gentleman, his wife, and daughters were uch annoyed on Saturday night at one of the much annoyed on Saturday night at one of the theaters by the conversation of several ady neighbors during the play. At last, when the trouble had become insupportable, "Emma," said the father, addressing one of his girls, who, by the way, had not deserved to be so addressed, "Please don't talk any more; we came to hear the stage." The real offenders took the hint, and there was silence among them the rest of the evening.

Humanity to the Horse Many writers, including these of highest surhority, have objected to the use of the abolition. The pain, the injury, the desiruction of the animals are eaused by the senseless and cruel invention. Yet its employment is continued, or only abandoned in a two-very few ecases. Sects and argument, therefore, are of little avail. Should not the law now advance in the enforcement of humanity to the horse? Let our Pistrict begin this important reform by the homenable e-amissionnes panying of Congress a statute which shall cause the streat, line, or imprisonment of every person, from the President of the United States down to the occupant of the poorest eart, who may be found driving a horse with a check refn.
